Expeditionary diplomacy is a media-friendly term for the State Department's effort, begun in the second term of the Bush Administration and modified but continued in the Obama Administration, to improve U.S. capacity to respond appropriately and effectively to international conflicts that involve American interests. Its institutional expression in the State Department is the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations, created in 2011 under the leadership of Secretary Hilary Clinton. One of the Bureau's first projects was to assist the Government of Senegal, which is among the closest U.S. friends and partners in Africa and the Islamic community, in an initiative to end a 30-year secessionist conflict in the southern part of the country, known as the Casamance. A retired career diplomat, Ambassador Jim Bullington, was recalled to active duty to implement this engagement. Expeditionary Diplomacy in Action is a first-hand, insider account of the successful U.S. diplomatic effort to help end this deadly and debilitating conflict. It is not about international relations theory or history, but contemporary nuts-and-bolts diplomatic practice and the day-to-day life of a senior American diplomatic couple in West Africa. It suggests expeditionary diplomacy as a conflict response model that falls between the extremes of trying to act everywhere as a global policeman, and of ignoring small conflicts and letting them fester until they directly threaten important American interests and require much more costly and difficult interventions. The book is about the experience of Jim Bullington and his wife, Tuy-Cam, as they moved to Dakar and were attached to the U.S. Embassy for an exciting and ultimately successful year of intensive diplomacy. In a series of letters and reports, they recount their...
